Greensboro, NC -- Teenaged heroes are helping people gain easier access to their homes.

They're building access ramps for low-income homeowners with disabilities as part of Greensboro's "Ramp-A-Thon."

The teens are part of the Catholic HEART Workcamp and come from across the country.

One teen called the service project is a lot of fun and "good work."

She told WFMY News 2 that it is great meeting people from different places who come together to help a community.

The volunteers will build eight ramps this week and repair two others.
