Parma applies for funding to provide free wheelchair ramps for residents

PARMA The city hopes to start providing free wheelchair ramps for disabled residents and has budgeted $15,000 toward the ramps in 2013.

However, to make it happen, the city needs federal Community Development Block Grant funds. The city has applied for a grant but as of Monday it was not known whether the money would come through.

The issue was discussed Feb. 19 during a City Council budget hearing.

It was Erik Tollerup, the city's director of community services and economic development, who announced the grant application for a possible ramp program.

Tollerup said if the city receives funding, it would spend no more than $2,000 on each ramp.

Wheelchair ramps can cost hundreds or thousands of dollars, depending on their lengths and the materials from which they are made.

Councilwoman Mary Buchholz Galinas said she was glad to hear about the ramp program. She said it is needed in Parma.

However, Galinas said wheelchair ramps don't always look nice and that they sometimes fall apart. She asked if the city would require the ramps to be made from any particular types of materials.

Tollerup said no. He said the type of house would determine what kind of material would be used for the wheelchair ramp.

After the budget hearing, Tollerup refused to answer further questions about the possible ramp program.
